1/16/2006 6 min Open The opinions expressed by entrepreneurial contributors are unique. When I was working in corporate America, my salary was put directly into my bank account every other week like a watch. Once I negotiated my salary when I started a new job, when I knew how much raise I would get and if I would have a bonus for the year, until the performance review, I had never thought about it again. As an entrepreneur, it's not a good thing that you're paid at all. In fact, when times are tough, you're the last to line up on payday anyway. So how do you decide when and how much to pay? There are many schools of thought here, but most of the entrepreneurs I know follow some consistent patterns. At least in the first few months of the operation, as your business has started, there are no plans to draw any salary at all. It is very common for many founders to actually post a salary without cutting a check for a while. As business momentum begins and customers/customers pay in regular cycles, founders can create distributions with more confidence. If your business slows down again, don't buy a new luxury sedan, sports car or yacht too soon, as you may need a capital call. Just in case, keep your cash reserves handy. As the business lifts, you can pay a little more yourself. I know founders who started with a quarterly draw, but then moved to bimonthly and monthly distributions as the business grew. But they also kept money down to invest in infrastructure to keep up with growing demand. I'm not a lawyer or accountant, but I know that if your business can afford it, you should pay yourself a fair level for your experience and industry. Here are some tips to help you figure out how to pay for yourself: research the range of amounts paid in the industry to determine if it's worth it, and budget it into cash flow forecasts to figure out the operating capital you need first. If you have an X amount of capital, you need to make an X amount on it before you start paying yourself. Personal financial statements describing living expenses, credit costs, goals, loans, etc. Determine how much you need to cover everything. In my experience, it's much more common than your expenses are higher and your earnings are lower than your initial forecast. As one entrepreneur I know says, Double your expenses, half your income, and if you're still making money, you're in the right business. After the startup phase, if you want to bring more than your budget into your business to cover basic expenses, you can take that percentage and increase your salary. Be sure to pay quarterly taxes. Many entrepreneurs rent to Uncle Sam in June, September, January and April every year. Plan because he doesn't have a sense of humor and your landlord or credit card company doesn't either!My business model is like I get a percentage of all the deals and I was able to pay myself from the start. But I didn't really make a lot of money for the first few months because I self-funded all the startup costs. I was lucky enough reserves to keep things moving forward in our launch phase. Accounting and payroll don't like to spend my time, so I entrust salaries and tax preparation to professionals. It's a small price to pay to sleep better (and longer) at night. Those of me who started my career at a large company wanted to pay people regularly, including myself. It felt like an important milestone: Real. For the first few years, I run payroll every month, but as I grew and expanded, I've been running it more often. I'm still footing the bill for all my expenses, but every few weeks when I look directly at my deposit statement in my bank report, I smile knowing that our business is healthy and growing and, most importantly, I'm still having fun. I've had jobs in the past and the only explanation for why I was there was salary. I don't want another job just because it pays me well. But I love making jobs to pay others well, and in doing so, I regularly found meaningful ways to pay myself fairly and easily. My professor said happiness is positive cash flow, but I really believe that when you find the right career that makes you happy, it doesn't always feel like a job, but pay cheques also start to get regular. Bob Dylan had a great quote that I will always remember, what is the money? If you wake up in the morning and go to bed at night and do what you want to do in the mean time, the man is a success. The most successful and happiest person I know is the one who doesn't confuse their bank account with their true value. The real goal is not just to make a life, but to make a life. There are many ways to pay bills, but others are more advantageous than others. I'm lucky that what I enjoy is also what people are willing to pay for. One thing I've learned is that you can't think of others as motivated by the same things that drive you. Since my first salary, I've always set money up for savings. When I received the raise, I pretended the increase didn't happen and put the extra money into my investments and savings. I leave you with a wonderful quote from Bette Davis to be allowed to sweat on solitary labor and given the opportunity to create, to achieve a dream is the meat and potatoes of life. Money is gravy. Like everyone else, I love dunking my crust on it. But that alone is not a diet designed to keep the body and soul together. If you don't sell your car and buy a new one, you don't need car insurance. Unless you contact your insurance agent, there's no way to know that your insurer no longer needs the service. It will continue to send you invoices, which may cause problems if you are never officially-and don't pay premiums. Revoking an insurance policy doesn't affect your credit score, but sending debt to collection can cause significant damage. If you do not officially cancel the policy, it may happen if the insurance company continues to send you invoices. By the time debt collection agencies contact you, it's a matter of not only canceling the policy, but trying to repair your credit rating. Taking the phone or emailing your insurance agent to cancel your policy can take less time and save you a lot of problems. The agent will tell you exactly what you need to do. You may also be refunded for unused portions of your insurance premiums. This article contains links that you may be rewarded for clicking on and are free to use for you. In many ways, apps are revolutionizing the way we live. It can be hard to imagine what the world was like a few years ago when the app still had to debut. I barely know anyone who can survive without their favorite app now - and I'm always checking out new apps that can help me live a richer and richer life. There are so many apps on the market, but today I'm going to talk about the 65 best apps that pay you. You can use these apps to earn cash in your free time - whether you're looking to make a couple of extra dollars for coffee - or hundreds of dollars to supplement your income. From shopping on a mobile device to completing a survey on a survey site to which your app is linked, you can use your app to make money. You can even get paid to watch the video - isn't it great? Taking an app-paid questionnaire that pays you to take a paid survey is one of the easiest ways to make some quick money online. A word of caution - it probably won't enrich you - but it's a very nice way to make some extra cash. And if you do it often enough, it adds up. I know people who are making hundreds of dollars a month by taking surveys, no jokes. Survey junkie survey junkies have more than 10 million members who fill out surveys and give opinions for points that can be exchanged for cash or gift cards.
